JOE WAS REAL GAY.

Mrs. Pritchard No. 1 Relates Some of His Adventures.

HIS RECENT MARRIAGE WAS NOT, IT SEEMS, "HIS FIRST OFFENSE."

Story of a Trip to Springfield, Ill., and Mrs. Pritchard's Alleged Shocking Discovery There—She Has Letters in Which Pritchard Addresses Her as Wife—Pritchard Still Denies.

The issuance of the warrant for the arrest of Joe Pritchard yesterday, and his arrest by Marshal Nagle, was an unexpected development of the complications growing out of his marital alliance. Amid all his troubles, however, Joe has maintained that there was not a particle of evidence against him; that the charge was trumped up, and the persons at the bottom of it would suffer. His nonchalant treatment of the whole matter lent an outward air of truth to his statement, and his first wife, Mrs. Eliza Pritchard, was asked to-day what answer she had to make to his denial.

"I do not see what answer I can make," said Mrs. Pritchard, "further than to lay my finger on the documents which show the marriage. His unsupported denials cannot stand against the records. I know that I am right."

FURTHER PROOF.
It was suggested that the next thing to be right is to appear to be right. Mrs. Pritchard then said: "Well, I sold my property at 87 Madison street and purchased the ground on which our home was built at 237 St. Louis avenue. The house was erected on the installment plan by both of us jointly. Justice McCaffrey bought the house at a later date, but the transfer could not be made until Pritchard returned to the city and attached his signature to the papers, because he was my husband."

"I have had so much trouble in my married life with Pritchard that I cannot tell where it began or where it ended. And yet he never was brutally mean to me, or mistreated me in any way. At only one time, I think it was in February, 1890, he took his satchel and left home to organize a new base ball association at Springfield. I believe it was to be called the Interstate League. He was gone three weeks when I was told that he had a woman named Lizzie Reed with him from St. Louis and introduced her to his wife. I was very angry, but I did not say a word. I bought a round trip ticket and went at once to Springfield. There I found the pair registered at the Hotel Belmont, at main and wife. I went to him to reproach him, but I saw enough, and the servants of the house carried me downstairs for I felt faint. The manager of the hotel ordered the woman out of the house, for he did not want any trouble to occur in his place. Pritchard took her to another hotel and sent her home on an afternoon train at 6 o'clock. Just think of it! He took my round trip ticket and gave it to that woman to go back to St. Louis. I thought that he had some idea of my going, so I made my way to the depot. There I saw Joe put the woman on the train. He saw me and wanted me to go with him in Springfield until the next day. But I refused, I had no ticket and no money to pay my fare, but I never would stay with him in that city. I resolved to give my diamonds to the conductor, to let me come home. Some country people who were on the train were anxious to give me money as soon as they could. In the circumstances of the case, and a minister of Springfield gave me $5 which paid my way to St. Louis. Even then, I was not satisfied. I wanted to give me money to bring me home, Pritchard tried to put me off the train, but he did not succeed and I came back home in the same train with that other woman. Pritchard was afraid that I would give the diamonds to the public in St. Louis, for he remained up all night to catch a train to Springfield at 1 o'clock in the morning. He came straight to our home on St. Louis avenue. He was all about to eat breakfast the very same morning. He made all sorts of promises, and I told him back again that I was not one of the most strenuous efforts that the affair was kept from the public, and even now there are many people in this city who know the facts which I have stated."

"On another occasion I gave him $2,000 to start a ticket brokerage office on Broadway, but he neglected his business, and my money was squandered. I certainly do not know how he can claim that he is not my husband, in the face of the stack of affectionate letters which he wrote me. Why, I have a letter which he sent me by a messenger boy only last Christmas, in which he addressed me as his affectionate wife and enclosed a card which said: 'I am always looking upon him as my husband, and I do not like to see him exposed in any way.'"

Pritchard secured bail in the sum of $1,000 yesterday afternoon and was released from custody. Chris Von der Ahe stated last evening that he would not go on Pritchard's trial in his marital troupe.

Chris Von der Ahe wants it distinctly understood that he has refused to go on Pritchard's trial, although he was requested to do so. Mr. Von der Ahe knows nothing about Pritchard's affairs except what he has seen in the newspapers.

WIRE-BOUND GUNS.

Pushing the Work—Careful Technical Tests Applied.

WATERBURY, Mass., April 16.—Work upon the Woodbridge wire-wound gun is being continued in spite of the fact that the allotment necessary to complete it has been expended. Maj. Riley, the ordnance officer in charge of the arsenal at this place, determined to finish the gun as soon as possible and forward it to Sandy Hook for trial. The great delay in the work has been largely owing to the manager equipping for gunwork. An experiment is being conducted here that possesses a great deal of interest to army and navy ordnance officers in connection with the ten-inch wire-wound steel gun. It is a test by interior hydrostatic pressure of the base of the gun about 100 feet above the water level. The pressure is applied to that place of ordnance. No great amount of pressure has been made, so far as known, but in such a way as to develop much more fully than has been done the correspondence between the loss of resistance as at present accepted and the teachings of a purely experimental determination.

Pressures are applied in successive multiples of 1,000 pounds per square inch, and the elastic or permanent change of diameter interior, middle thickness, and exterior of the cylinder for each pressure are measured and recorded to the nearest ten-thousandth of an inch.

ARE AT WAR AGAIN

The Feud Between Real Estate Agent Duffy and Dr. Day Reopened.

DUFFY PUTS UP A HIGH FENCE TO OBSCURE THE DOCTOR'S VIEW.

Its Erection Leads to the Raising of a Big Sign, on Which the Real Estate Agent Is Given a Bad Character—The Sign Destroyed—What the Principals Have to Say.

The clan of Duffy and the house of Day are again arrayed against each other, and the feud which began for a time over the Marre saloon has again been revived. A few days ago some laborers drove up to the vacant lot on the north side of Finney avenue a few feet west of Sarah street, with three old telegraph poles and a lot of old lumber. They dumped the poles and the lumber on the lot and went to work digging three holes for the three old telegraph poles. These holes began at the inside edge of the sidewalk and extended in a row along the east edge of the lot to a point near the front of the adjoining house.

This house and the two next to it belong to Dr. J. L. Day. He occupies the one on the corner and rents the other two. They are three-story stone-fronts, and have a fine sidewalk about twenty feet wide, and have nice little grass plats in front of them. The vacant lot where the pole-holes were being dug belongs to Jos. A. Duffy, the real estate agent.

When the laborers were digging their holes they tramped over Dr. Day's grass plats and stretched back from the corner of the lot to trace up their poles. Dr. Day came out and ordered them off his premises, and then got a policeman to watch them.

That same afternoon the work was done, and a fence twenty feet high stood along the western line of Dr. Day's grass plats, shutting off all the views from his house to the west, and of his house from the west.

The fence was of a source of joy to the cartoonist of a funny paper. It was intended to be ugly, and the intention was fully carried out. It is propped up with pieces of timber and planking of all sizes, edges and kinds. The posts are hacked and scarred, and taken as they come, and are used as they are. The fence is as ugly as the man who built it. The fence stood undisturbed until last night, when at midnight the cause for its existence was announced. A man named Duffy was working on the west edge of Dr. Day's westernmost grass plat.

The sign was of canvas, 20 feet long and 4 feet high, and was supported by three wooden crosses painted a bright green. On the sign was painted first in large letters: "THIS IS A PIECE OF DIRTY SPITE WORK."

Then followed in equally large letters some most abusive statements concerning Mr. Duffy. He was charged with the most sordid and malicious character was most severely reflected upon.

The entire neighborhood was very much interested and a great number of people assembled to view the sign as it nestled under the high plank fence, which was in itself no small curiosity. About 9 o'clock some one tore down most of the canvas sign and left only the framework with the green painted crosses. The presumption in the mind of everybody was that Dr. Day had put up the sign, or had had it put up, but came most strenuously denied. How much further the feud between the Duffys and the Days will be carried, no one can tell.

HOW IT STARTED.
It started some years ago when Dr. Day decided to build a house on the northwest corner of Sarah street and Finney avenue. He had some trouble with Agent Duffy then, and he says that Agent Duffy became angry because the contract to build the house was not given to his father. Then Mr. Duffy bought the lot near Dr. Day's lot, and a controversy over the dividing line between the two lots, and the tax-payers and the feeling still more. Duffy owned the southeast corner of Sarah street and Finney avenue, and there was a first-class store building with several nice residences next to it. The store was rented by Marre Bros. for a saloon, then Dr. Day pulled all the forces he could and started a most bitter war upon the saloon. Duffy of course sided with his tenants and fought back. In spite of all Dr. Day could do the Marre Bros. got a license to run the saloon, and ran it they did.

Dr. Day kept up the fight and organized an opposition to the saloon, which worked in the property-owners and tax-payers in the same block with the Marre saloon. When the time came for a renewal of the license for the saloon Marre Bros. went about the block as usual with a petition to secure the signatures of a majority of the tax-payers in the block. A society had worked too well and the requisite number of names could not be secured. So for a few days there was a running fight in the camp of the Dayites, but it was not to last long. Marre Bros. came to the rescue, and Duffy tenants and played a little game which was fully exposed at the time. He cut up the back part of the Marre saloon into one or two strips, transferred them to a number of different persons, who immediately signed the petition and provided the requisite number of names. This method of securing signatures satisfied Collector Ziegenheim and he accordingly granted the saloon a license another year.

The doctor goes armed.

The resentment of the Duffy side against Dr. Day was very bitter; they claimed that living in spite of the fact that the allotment necessary to complete it has been expended. Maj. Riley, the ordnance officer in charge of the arsenal at this place, determined to finish the gun as soon as possible and forward it to Sandy Hook for trial. The great delay in the work has been largely owing to the manager equipping for gunwork. An experiment is being conducted here that possesses a great deal of interest to army and navy ordnance officers in connection with the ten-inch wire-wound steel gun. It is a test by interior hydrostatic pressure of the base of the gun about 100 feet above the water level. The pressure is applied to that place of ordnance. AN UNWARRANTED CLAIM.

The Louise Chester Heirship Case to Be Reopened.

New York, April 16.—A morning paper states that it has indisputable evidence that the claims of "Henry C. Chester" of California to the estate of Louise Chester of Brooklyn is not valid. Efforts will be made to have the case reopened next week, and if possible a stop put to the further disposition of the property. More than half of it is already gone, but perhaps an amount equal to $15,000 to $20,000 may yet be saved. The paper states that the evidence is overwhelming that Louise Chester and Henry C. Chester belonged to two entirely different families. In fact they were not kin whatever, and therefore the putting forward of the man from Happy Camp as the legal heir to the $60,000 left by the dead woman of Brooklyn is unwarranted.

Central Trades Council.

The Central Trades Council held a meeting at Turner Hall last evening to amend the constitution so as to enable the various trades to join the central organization. About thirteen trades were represented but no definite action was taken to insure immediate compliance with the principle objected to. The old constitution is that some trades representing only a small membership are entitled to as large a vote in the election of officers as those representing a controlling vote.
